BAKERY APPLICATION

We make a special type of edible fat made by a process called hydrogenation, which involves adding extra hydrogen atoms to the aforementioned vegetable fats and turns them into solids, rather than liquids. It refers to the process of a fat interfering with the formation of a gluten matrix in dough. This process is important for many baked goods, such as pie crusts, because gluten creates a gummy or chewy end product.

It is also used in baked goods to keep them soft after baking. Unlike butter which separates into oil and milk solids upon melting, this remains intact and reverts back to its soft, semi-solid state upon cooling. For this reason, cookies and other baked goods made with this tend to be soft, while those made with butter have a crispier texture. It has a higher smoke point than butter and is also cheaper than butter.

VANASPATI

Vanaspati ghee is made from partially-hydrogenated permitted vegetable oils, and converted to solid form by hydrogenation. It is grainy in texture and is favored for deep-frying. It is used as a substitute for ghee in cooking as well in the production of bakery products, sweets and snack items.

Vanaspati ghee is most notably said to stimulate the secretion of stomach acids to help with digestion, while other fats, such as butter and oils, slow down the digestive process and can sit heavily in the stomach.

Vanaspati ghee is used mainly in cooking (to bake, to sauté, to deep-fry) and because of being so flavorful it can be used just half or two-thirds as much as other cooking oils. Having a high burning point, it doesn't burn or smoke during cooking. It combines very well with a wide variety of spices.

Various grades of Vansapati are made according to customer needs & applications ranging from basic to super premium. For more details, please feel free to visit our website or contact our customer service team.
